Firstly, The writer creates

The writer makes the eagle sound ~~patient~~ Patient. This is shown with the metaphor by the writer's use of "watches" in the second paragraph. This creates the feeling of Patients as the eagle looks for his next meal, so too close the writer continues that idea by adding "from his mountain wall." This makes the reader see that the eagle is willing to wait and has done this before claiming that mountain wall.

Secondly, the writer makes the eagle sound fierce. This is achieved by the writer's use of "thunderbolt." This creates the feeling that the eagle will go to great lengths to get food, so too close the writer increases that forward by using "he falls." This makes the reader drawn in as the eagle falls creating that sense of fear but leaving it on a cliffhanger which is funny because he was on a cliff falling.
